

8.2 The tried and tested: re-engineering to fit the NP.

It is not Barnham & Eastergate's role to critique the fiscal economic implications of the above but rather to use this information to our best advantage. The conclusions drawn are:

1. Improving the incomes of those with the least has the greatest multiplier effect on demand (growth) as their propensity to spend is also the greatest.
2. Education and skill training can offer a double boost to growth as both the teacher and the taught have the potential to add to the economy.
3. Time is of the essence, and being able to facilitate a cascade of activity and retain the benefits locally will aid the growth of our district economy. Also, as pointed out, small businesses are the key driver for 70% of all new jobs.
